George E. Pataki, Governor

If you need skilled workers...and if you want to make a worthwhile investment in the future of your business and its employees... consider these seven advantages to operating your own apprenticeship program:

1 A Source of Trained Workers -

You can help guarantee your company a steady supply of competent, well-trained workers to replace workers being promoted, retiring or leaving for other reasons. Apprenticeship is also an excellent way to prepare for an anticipated workforce expansion.

2 Economy -

Apprentice training costs you practically nothing because your apprentices produce while they're learning.

3 Less Turnover -

Apprentices in a certified training program know they've got jobs with futures. Satisfied employees mean less potential turnover for you.

4 Improved Labor Relations -

You establish a mutually beneficial association with the apprentices in your employ; apprentices may work their way into leadership roles within your company.

5 Career Advancement Opportunities for Employees -

Employers who offer career advancement opportunities such as apprenticeship report that employees have higher morale, better motivation and increased job satisfaction.

6 Public Recognition -

Apprenticeship training programs approved by New York State enjoy the respect of industry and labor alike.

7 Improved Safety and Health -

The structured on-the-job training and related instruction outlined for every apprenticeship program ensures employees learn how to do their jobs safely and properly.
